Williamsburg Fall Activity

Williamsburg, Va., August 29.- The autumn season in this historic city, traditionally starting with Labor Day, includes a galaxy of special activities rivaling the famed foliage for color and interest.

Highlight of the fall calendar this year is the visit of the Lord Mayor of London here on September 12-15, closely followed by the resumption of the weekly 18th century play and concert series and other events including football games at the College of William and Mary, flower shows, Yorktown Day exercises, Thanksgiving dinners and other regular and special activities supplementing the historic and vacation appeal of this restored colonial city.

Visitors here on Friday, September 14, will see an impressive procession along Duke of Gloucester Street with the Lord Mayor of London in his ceremonial robes and mayors of many of the capitals of the original colonies using an order of march used two centuries ago here. Following the colorful procession, the Lord Mayor, who is making the first visit of a Lord Mayor to the U. S. while in office, will deliver an important address on Anglo-American relations at the colonial capitol in ceremonies open to the public.

The weekly series of concerts and plays which provide a bright touch of colonial entertainment for visitors will get underway in September. Beginning on September 13, with the Lord Mayor in attendance that night, the popular concerts of 17th and 18th century music by musicians in colonial dress will be presented weekly on Thursday evenings in the candlelit ballroom of the Governor's Palace. On Friday evenings during the same period, a 17th century comedy, "The Anatomist" will be presented in the colonial manner on the stage of the Reception Center.

Four home football games of the College of William and Mary are scheduled in Williamsburg during the fall and there are flower shows in the community and a play at the college is slated.

On October 19, ceremonies will be held at nearby Yorktown commemorating the surrender of the British in 1781 ending the Revolutionary War. In late November, the 25th anniversary of the start of the restoration work in Williamsburg will be marked.

Accomodations are numerous in the restored city at Williamsburg Inn and Lodge and the numerous motor courts and the private guest homes, but visitors are urged to make reservations in advance especially during the fall season.

Walking Prescribed Way To Keep the Ankles Slim

Puffy ankles may not be the main cause of blasted Summer romances, but they certainly are no help when you're trying to look and feel your best on the beach or in that new summer ensemble.

If you ankles and feet have a tendency to swell with the onset of warm weather, there's good news for you in the recent findings of a group of foot specialists.

The doctors advise you to do less standing and more walking. Although this may sound paradoxical they explain that standing on your feet for any length of time causes the foot and leg muscles to contract and impede the normal circulation of your blood.

Walking is the perfect antidote for this condition. Foot muscles and ligaments are alternately contracted and relaxed as you walk—and your hard-working feet are momentarily relieved of weight-bearing after each step. Wearing leather-soled shoes will assure flexible support for the thousands of different positions that your foot assumes during your health and beauty stroll.

To get full benefit from walking, as a matter of fact, your feet must be shod properly, the experts warn. You should wear shoes that really fit the contours of your feet and that are roomy enough to allow full toe action. Heels should be no higher than an inch and a half, and in order to balance foot structure on an even plane make sure that your shoes are equipped with genuine leather soles.

Aside from wearing the proper footgear, the doctors advise that you follow these simple rules, which will not only help to prevent puffy ankles, but also will keep your feet and general body tone up to par: Take regular walking exercises, particularly if your work keeps you standing or sitting in one position all day. When resting at home, elevate your feet and legs so as to relieve the congestion in your lower extremities.

So, if you want to make certain that those slim ankles of which you're so proud will stay slim, hit the road, sister.

Death toll for year on Virginia highways passes the 600 mark.

U.N. Takes the Road Signs On Journey Round the Globe

A humble, unsung sentinel beside the highways of the earth—the road sign—suddenly has become a world traveler.

In France, Chile, Turkey, India and Southern Rhodesia, the yellow-and-black curlicues, curves and angles of American highway markers have sprouted to guide foreign motorists through a series of United Nations safety tests.

At the same time, U.S. drivers are being taken over short sections of roads in Ohio, New York, Virginia and Minnesota marked temporarily by the bright-colored, cartoonlike signs of Europe's international highways.

A puffing locomotive in a red triangle is the European-style warning of railroad crossings unprotected by gates. Silhouettes of children signify a school or playground ahead. The outline of a careening automobile means "Slow Down—Slippery Road," while a sign that looks like a camel's back clearly says "Bump!"

In the few decades since high-speed travel by automobile began to make over the world, signs have become vital to the safety of millions. America, land of a single language, is sown with signs reading "Stop," "Dangerous Curve," or the famous "Stop, Look and Listen."

But in Europe, touring motorists have long been confused and confounded by signs which give obviously important information in an incomprehensible language. Other signs give warnings in several languages—and are so complicated they cannot be read without coming to a full stop.

In 1926, realizing the need for a universal sign language, an international meeting in Paris drew up a code of symbols and pictures which all countries could use. In 1949, these signs became the basis for a new standardization of signs by a United Nations commission.

News Around Town

By Mrs. Calvin Robinson

Did you ever hear this one:

She knew her hours were numbered so she called her husband to her bedside and in a faltering voice pleaded her last request of him.

"You and mother have never gotten along, but please do one favor for me. Ride to the cemetery in the automobile with her."

"All right" glumly replied the husband. "But it will spoil my whole day."

Don't forget the date: September 2—the annual Caldwell - Marshall family reunion. It will be held at the home place of the late Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Marshall, Father Darkleaf and I have been "adopted" as "cousins" and plan to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Ferguson have announced the birth of a daughter, Norma Jean, born at the Virginia Baptist Hospital Tuesday, August 28.

Harry Gordon Lawson and Sam Ferguson, III, U. S. Navy, stationed at Bainbridge, Md., are spending a leave at their homes here.

Let us all wish Miss Hazel Moon a Happy Birthday! The date is September 24. Mail cards to:

Miss Hazel Moon,
